Planting an Orchard.

The first thing to do on going to plant an orchard is to break up the land as deep as possible, and then mark out the rows both ways, and as straight as possible, with a two-horse turning plow—the rows to be not less than thirty feet apart. Right here it were well to say that more orchards have been injured by the trees being planted too close than from all other causes combined, for the reason that in a few years the roots will meet, and, having no fresh soil in which to seek their food, they come to a standstill, and the trees, eking out a miserable existence, finally die of pure starvation. Dig the holes at the intersection of the rows not less than two feet square, and barely deep enough to allow the tree to stand as deep but no deeper than it stood in the nursery, taking care in setting each tree not to crowd the roots, but allowing them to take their natural position, as much so as before they were dug. After which cover the roots with fine rich mold procured for the purpose if the surface soil is not rich enough of itself. Have as many substantial stakes prepared as there are trees to be planted, dropping one at each hole and after the trees are set in place drive a stake down some two or three inches from the body of the tree, fill up the hole nearly full with fine earth, adding water as it is being thrown in until within an inch or so of the surface, after which complete the filling up with dry earth. Now seems each tree to its stake by a band of twisted straw wrapped once around the body of the tree before tying to the stake, to prevent rubbing.

This is all that is necessary, until the spring following, when the ground should be well cultivated, but no crop planted thereon until the spring thereafter, when the ground should be liberally manured with a compost made of swamp muck, if procurable, stable manure and ashes, and planted in some hood crop—corn being about the best, as its cultivation is exactly what the trees will want. Follow the above course for a couple of years, care being taken during the time that no kind of stock other than hogs are ever allowed to enter the same. It costs too much to set out an orchard unless it is done right and the trees properly cultivated and attended afterwards at least for the first few years after being planted.—Baltimore Sun.

"Parisians," remarked Brown, "seem determined that there shall be nothing slow about their country."

"Indeed," responded Smith. "Yes," said Brown, "they can come about fifty tons of snails each season."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

The Graham boys report a huge swallowing. They say two king snakes undertook to swallow a ground rattler. One commenced at his head and the other at his tail. They swallowed until they met, and then swallowed each other.

—Jesup (Ga.) Sentinel.

There are 561,800 pensioners now on the rolls, and the government has paid on that account nearly $1,000,000,000 since the close of the war.

By washing a pine floor with a solution of one pound of copperas in one gallon of strong lye, the appearance of oak flooring may be produced.

According to the census taken last May, which has only just been published, the population of Paris itself amounts to 2,263,945, or including the suburbs of Neuilly, St. Denis, Vincennes and Charenton 1,868,326.

There are at the present moment over 1,200,000 foreign residents in France, of which over 800,000 are Germans. The latter are mostly settled either in Paris itself or the country lying between the metropolis and the eastern frontier. The danger which would result to France therefrom in case of a war with Prussia is obvious.

Her Invitation.

In the parlor they were sitting—
Sitting by the firelight's glow,
Quickly were the minutes flitting,
Till at last he rose to go.

With his overcoat she pattered,
From her eyes escaped a tear—
"Must you go so soon?" she muttered;
"Won't you stay to breakfast, dear?"

A GIRL BULL-FIGHTER.

Expert Work in the Ring by a Mexican Girl—A Wonderful Thrust.

City of Mexico letter to the Indianapolis Journal: Just prior to the taking effect of the degree against bull-fighting I was fortunate enough to witness a contest in which one of the most skillful, daring, and expert of the professional fighters of Mexico took a leading part. This performer was a young woman, whose equal has probably never appeared in the "Plaza de Toros." In this her farewell exhibition Senorita Hernandez advertised for the wildest and fiercest bulls the country could produce, and agreed to fight them while wearing stilts. The novelty of a young girl engaging in bull-fighting handicapped by having stilts fastened to her feet was sufficient to attract a vast crowd, and on the day fixed for the event fully 5,000 persons found places to sit or stand in the large amphitheatre. The animals provided for the occasion were small, active, and wholly untamed, each having his horns trimmed and polished until the points were as bright and almost as sharp as needles. Never was more expert work done in this cruel sport than was performed by the Mexican girl that day. As the bull, mad with rage, would make his furious charge, she would stand until he had approached within a distance of about three feet, when, suddenly springing to one side, she would, as the animal rushed furiously by, with one hand slap him in the face with the red cloak with which his anger had been first aroused, while with the other hand she dexterously thrust into his neck a gaudy barbed "banderilla," causing him to roar with pain and rage. Charge after charge was made by the maddened brute, only to be eluded by the active girl, while the bull met the same treatment as before. The little senorita played with him, plucked him, and tortured him as a cat would a mouse, until the animal, bleeding and sore and worn out with fatigue and pain, gave up the contest and would fight no more. He had met his conqueror, and was taken from the ring.

In the next contest the fair Castilian was under an advertised obligation, while yet wearing the stilts, to kill the bull with a sword scarcely more than two feet in length. This was to be done by the toreadora at the time the animal was making the charge, the fatal thrust to be given while she was directly in front of and fairly facing the bull.

The animal selected for this contest was a beautiful specimen of his race. Black as coal, agile as a cat, savage and wild, he was no sooner within the arena than he was ready for the battle. After he had been permitted to make a charge or two to warm him to his work, the Governor, who presided on the occasion, gave the signal and the bugle sounded the "death call." The senorita, with stilts of one foot in height securely fastened to her limbs, received the short sword, saluted the Governor, and, turning to her enemy, gave a shout of defiance and waved her scarlet cloak to rouse his anger. At this time the distance separating the antagonists was almost 200 feet. Toro, quivering with excitement and pawing the earth in his rage, waited for no second invitation. With flashing eyes and head lowered to the ground he started at full speed for the object of his hate. The brave girl waited until the beast was within twenty feet, when, bracing herself firmly, she held her sword at shoulder height ready for his coming. When within about four feet she threw her body suddenly forward, gave a quick thrust with the sword, and, without waiting to see the effect of the blow, swung quickly around and again saluted the Governor. In the twinkling of an eye she turned to face the bull, and as she did so he dropped dead, so close to her that, without moving from her position, she placed one foot upon the neck of her now helpless enemy.

The sword, directed by the strong arm of the self-possessed girl, had severed the spinal cord, and death was instantaneous and probably painless. It was a perilous feat, skillfully and fearlessly performed, and the slightest nervousness on the part of the performer would probably have resulted in her death. The great audience, in recognition of the skill of the brave toreadora, rose to its feet, and for several moments there was a shower of gold and silver coins falling around the victorious girl.
